

Speakers sound too expensive

Published: 05 Mar 2010

THESE gorgeous gizmos are so pricey, you might need to sell both your ears to afford a pair.

And then what would the point of buying them be.

But they look amazing so we thought it was only right to let you salivate over the idea of putting a near £10,000 speaker system in your living room.

Made by specialists MERIDIAN AUDIO, they come in a range of eye-catching colours to match your home and are hand-built in Cambridgeshire during a six-week production period.

So at least if you can afford them, you'll know you're buying British.

Every bit of top-notch audio technology you can think of is contained inside to make them music to your ears.

In case you've won the lottery, a pair of the Meridian Select digital signal processing loudspeakers costs £7,763 while the subwoofer is £2,645.

Stop thinking! Even if you did scrape together enough money to snap them up, you wouldn't be able to buy any CDs, or a CD player!
